"Full Many A Flow'r"

The men of a certain fire department decided to give a fine presentation ax to their chief as a tribute to his long, faithful service. Elaborate plans were made for a programme to be given on the occasion, and one of the men was selected to deliver the speech. The eloquent and flowery tribute he prepared cost him toll no one would have guessed—unless it was the chief, who had caught certain rumors and was himself secretly spending labored hours over another oratorical triumph.

The flag draped hall was crowded when the great day arrived. On the platform sat a semi-circle of firemen in full red-shirted regalia. The programme opened with the inevitable "piano selection," and solemnly proceeded until the fateful moment, when the chosen fire-man stepped to the middle of the platform to address the chief.

The spokesman opened his mouth, but words came not. He looked at the chief, at the floor, at the ceiling, then made a wild gesture, gave a convulsive gulp, and said:

"Here's your ax."

The chief, who had arisen, gave him one look of dumb consternation and said:

"Hell! Is that the ax?"—December Lippincott's.

Anatomy For Beginners.

The brain is the headquarters of the nervous system and contains the central offices of the Anatomical Telephone Company.

When the suburban nerve-centre says, "Hello, Central," the brain either replies, "What number?" or "Busy," or "Out of order," as the case may be. Sometimes the wires are crossed and the company fails to declare any dividends, thus placing the entire brain in the hands of a receiver.

From the brain issues the spine, which is sometimes useful in matrimony, although rarely strong enough in man for practical purposes, and constantly growing weaker the longer he is married.

On top of the head the hair grows, or is supposed to. In some cases, however, it fails to grow despite the most painstaking efforts.

In ladies there are two kinds of hair: viz., imported and domestic; in gentlemen also two kinds, namely, permanent and transient. The permanent is seen in wild men; the transient in civilized men, when young.

At one time all the hairs were numbered, but the practice has been discontinued owing to great pressure of other matters—Thomas L. Masson in December Lippincott's.
